Yesterday afternoon, shortly after three clock, an alarm of fire was sounded from the Vigilant engine house in North Wheeling. It was quickly taken up by Wheeling. It was quickly taken up by the bells on the other engine houses, and in a few minutes spread throughout the entire city. A column of black smoke was seen rising over the hill north of Mt. Wood, and the report soon gained a wide-spread circulation that the "Top Mill," or Wheeling Iron Works, were on fire. On every street leading in that direction crowds of people rushed along the pavements, while large numbers climbed the hill east of the city and pressed on through the cemetery, over the ravine just beyond it, and ascussed the eminence overlooking the mill. The street cars were literally packed with persons eager to get to the scene of the fire. For many years there were the excene of the fire. For many years there were the excene of the fire.
